Note to editors:

Chevening House is the name of the official country residence of the British Foreign Secretary. In 1994 Douglas Hurd, the then Foreign Secretary renamed the Foreign & Commonwealth Office's scholarship and award scheme – "The British Chevening Scholarship Programme". About 2,000 scholars and fellows receive awards under the Chevening Programme each year to study in the UK, usually at Masters Level. The FCO provides the majority of financial support, the balance coming from external contributors, including other Government Departments, private sector organisations, higher education institutions, grant-giving foundations and trades unions. Competition for Chevening scholarships is intense with only around 1 in 25 applicants being successful.
